done so, they are requested to furnish the Officer in charge of the Treasury on which they draw bills, etc., a facsimile of their signature. Whenever the charge of an office is transferred, the officer making over charge should, in future, forward to the Treasury Officer a specimen signature of the relieved officer.

2. The Treasury Officer should before making payment on a bill cheque or pass order see that the signature on it corresponds with the specimen signature already furnished to him. He will therefore file all the specimen signatures received by him in such order as he may find most convenient for purposes of reference and will refuse payment on a bill if he has not been furnished with a specimen signature and is thereby not in a position to identify the drawer of the bill.

3. Officers who present bills to this office for preaudit are requested to send two specimen signatures at once and whenever any such officer makes over charge of his office to another, two specimen signatures of the relieving officer may similarly be forwarded to this office by the officer relieved.
